Singing Resistance, a musical grassroots collective launched in Minneapolis, gathers song leaders and singers to sing out in the face of fascism. Why sing? For starters, singing immediately evokes an emotional response from the soul and just feels good in your body. When you sing in a group, it gives you the sense that your voice matters for the larger whole. And it's a real, proven resistance strategy against violent forces.

Peaceful resistance singing is just one strategy of many that should be employed in times of violent occupation, but it's a crucial one that should not be overlooked. We need your voice!
